1732 onwards for the planned Japanese Palace for August the Strong were also a large number of celadon-glazed items with floral designs. On the initiative of the manufactory management, Höroldt had developed new base colours from 1726 onwards, including sea green, also known as celadon. The list of 1736 with the delivery from the Dresden warehouse to the Japanese Palace also includes the following entry: "38 St. grünglasurte kleine Suppenschalen ohne Henckel" (Boltz , Keramos 153/1996, p. 96). In 1769, after the premature completion of the new furnishing of the Palace, the following objects were, inter alia, included in the inventory of the Tower Room of the Dresden Residence and were listed under No. 196 as follows: "Sechzehnen Stück celadon Couleur glassurte Suppen-Schaalen mit Deckeln, worauf kleine Caningen sitzen, und weißen Schildern mit goldnen Rändgen eingefasst, worinnen Blümgen gemahlt, jede 4½. Zoll hoch, 5½. ? Zoll in Diam." (Claus Boltz, Keramos 1996, p. 80).
