Comparative items with a slightly different shape: - Dresden State Collections, Inv. No. PE 2840 (E. Schmidt 1953, p. 31). - Malcolm D. Gutter Collection (M. Santangelo 2018, p. 81), formerly Christie's London, 27 June 2005, Lot No. 2, formerly Blohm Collection (R. Schmidt 1953, p. 32). The model was first molded from Böttger stoneware and then from Böttger porcelain. Irminger, a silver- and goldsmith, was responsible for the design, which was inspired by Chinese teapots and silversmithing of the time. There were various variations of this model, lid designs and sizes. Although the lid on the teapot on offer may appear minimally larger, and the circumferential, applied floral decoration on the rim of the finial does not recur on the body of the teapot, the color scheme perfectly matches the teapot, just like the teapot in the Ariana Museum in Geneva. An interesting aspect is also the small corrections of firing defects, as is also the case on the teapot on offer, which Funcke concealed by overpainting them with painted flowers. In a Commission Report of 6 September 1720, a reference to the handling of defective porcelains is disclosed: "...auch wenn durch dem emailleur Funcken, die etwa in den Geschirren befindliche kleine Fehler, vermittelst Bedeckung mit denen Farben verbessert und solche zu dem Verkauffe gebracht werden können....." (Rückert 1990, p. 147).
