By virtue of both its size and the bold and experimental nature of its composition, the painting offered here constitutes one of the most ambitious and imaginative works by the Utrecht master Dirck van Baburen. Painted immediately after Baburen's return to the Netherlands from Rome around 1620/21, this work is still entirely influenced by Caravaggio's genius. The motif, rare in terms of its iconography, depicts the offering to Ceres, in which an assembly of mortals make offerings to the deity of the harvest, shown as a statue in the background on the left. Leonard J. Slatkes (1962) originally assumed that the work was created in the final years of Baburen's time in Rome, where he had resided for eight years. However, given its affinity with the similarly sized 'The Taking of Christ' in the Borghese Gallery (inv. no. 28; see Franits 2013, cat. no. A13), painted around 1619 – shortly before Baburen's departure from Rome – both Slatkes and Wayne Franits have, in more recent publications, agreed on a date of around 1621. This places the present painting at the forefront of the much-vaunted Utrecht period, during which Baburen, together with Gerrit van Honthorst (1592–1656) and Hendrick Ter Brugghen (1588–1629), led the group of painters known as the Utrecht Caravaggists until Baburen's early death in 1624. The relationship between these artists and their studios was so close that motifs and designs were often shared: the same figure of a soldier seen in the earlier work 'The Taking of Christ', was placed by Baburen at the centre of the composition presented here and was also used by Ter Brugghen for both his 'Beheading of St John the Baptist' (Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art, Kansas City; see Slatkes/Franits 2007, cat. no. A32) and his 'Piper' (Gemäldegalerie Alte Meister, Kassel, inv. no. GK179; see Slatkes/Franits 2007, cat. no. A62). Baburen's use of this dominant figure for both 'The Taking of Christ' and 'Offering to Ceres', is a quotation from Caravaggio's own 'The Taking of Christ' (National Gallery of Ireland, Dublin, inv. no. L.14702), though here the figure of the soldier is clearly more dominant. A somewhat later date of 1622 was suggested by Dr Fred. G. Meijer (see RKD archive no. 107755), who believes that the small floral wreath on the right was painted by Balthasar van der Ast (1593–1657). This would be an unusual example of a collaboration between Baburen and another artist, although not entirely surprising given Baburen's willingness to exchange motifs with other potential rivals. The sharp contours, bright tonality and colourful palette clearly situate this 'Offering to Ceres' in the artist's ultimately brief Utrecht period. Franits (2013) lists only thirty-six paintings by Baburen's own hand,
