d'Art et d'Histoire, no. 97. Literature: Antoine Salomon und Guy Cogeval: Vuillard. Le Regard innombrable. Catalogue critique des peintures et pastels, vol. I, Paris 2003, p. 126, no. II-97 (with ill.). "The paintings from this period, inspired by the Talisman, are small works, which slowly but inexorably radiate their own inner sonority, [. . .] Many of the works produced by the visionary Nabi [Vuillard] are mysteries that have to be solved, works whose rhythm and line imposed themselves on his consciousness like a kind of automatic writing" (Vuillard, exh. cat., National Gallery of Art, Washington, D.C., 2003, p. 53). The present, small painting is a wonderful example of Vuillard's work from his Nabi period. The Nabi artist group including Vuillard, Vallotton, Bonnard, Denis, and Sérusier among others, was at its peak in 1891/92. Their characteristic compositions were inspired by the structured interiors of the Belle Époque. Vuillard had spent considerable time in his mother's tailoring atelier watching the women at work in the dimly lit rooms. Mysterious outlines of enigmatic figures, mostly shown from behind and barely illuminated, emerge amidst richly contrasting surfaces.
